Horsham, PA August 12, 2011 — AmeriHealth Administrators, Inc., a leading national third party administrator of health benefits, has selected Thomson Reuters for healthcare analytic and account group reporting services.

Under a three-year contract, Thomson Reuters will support AmeriHealth Administrators with:

- Sophisticated data analytics that help identify plan members who may benefit from care management programs and measure the effectiveness of those programs.
- An application that produces reports quantifying the performance of health benefit plans for the firm's customers, largely self-insured employers.

"We believe Thomson Reuters' Advantage Suite® will provide us with better tools to reach plan members with health care information that is important and appropriate to their health status. This will enable us to improve the performance of our health management programs through robust health plan analytics that support our customers in managing health care and costs," said Gideon Hill, M.D., vice president and regional medical director for AmeriHealth Administrators.

Jon Newpol, executive vice president for the Healthcare business of Thomson Reuters, said: "We are pleased to partner with AmeriHealth Administrators as they make significant strides to manage the cost and quality of healthcare for plan members and employer customers."
